NO you can't say you made it.....

I am going to show you a couple of simple tactics that will make using twitter easier and lead to more traffic generated to your websites.

I am assuming you know what twitter is since you are here – but in case you don't it is a simple but powerful mini-blogging platform – a social networking system – where you post a one sentence blurb on what you are up to.

You might say – “I am making a website – take a look”

“It's my birthday! Here's a gift”

Anything relevant to you ... You follow people and they in turn follow you. It's simple, easy and MUCH more powerful than it sounds.

Step One

If you don't have an account with twitter than go here right now to get one:

<http://twitter.com/philgene> (yes that's me - sign up and follow –I'll follow you back ☺)

Step Two

Once you have an account you are going to set up a way to automatically respond to and follow anyone who follows you. When anyone follows you it is a great opportunity to send them a DIRECT MESSAGE (or a DM as it is called) saying thanks for following and to present them with a link to your website or blog.

The benefits of this should be obvious!

Here is how you will automate this direct message.

Go to <http://tweetlater.com> sign up and use their automatic functions. It's easy and quick. They provide several options – just make sure you set up the automatic follow and respond functions. Don't forget to finish up by setting a rule in your email account! Now your "thank you for following me" message will all be done automatically. There are more benefits to <http://tweetlater.com> that you will see – such as you can email all your friends at once – very useful...

Step Three

Now we want to set up an automatic system so that every time you post on your blog a Tweet is sent to Twitter (whoever came up with these names had birds on the brain...)

Here's how to do that.

Go to Twitterfeed <http://twitterfeed.com> and sign up using your OpenId - what is that you ask? It is an id that can be used across many platforms and most likely you have one already but don't know it. In any case you can sign up for an OpenId right there on the twitter feed home page.

Login to Twitterfeed with this OpenId and fill out the form telling them your twitter user name (mine is philgene for example). This is all very easy and actually simpler to do than to describe!

They will also need to know the URL of your Blog's feed – mine is <http://rapidresponsebot.com/blog/feed/> for example.

AND that's it – now when you post to your blog it will get posted on twitter with a link to the post!

Pretty cool and a great use of Twitter for traffic generation or whatever social reason you might have.

These two simple little automation task can result in HUGE returns. Please don't toss this away in the lost pile! Go do it right now. There are no costs anywhere and the only person gaining is you!

To your success in all you do.

Best Regards

Phil Eugene
